Report on the results of the experiment
 Date: 20/11/2019

The experiment was conducted to determine the effect of temperature on the rate of reaction between sodium thiosulfate and hydrochloric acid. The reaction is represented by the following equation:

$$2S_2O_3^{2-} + 2H^+ \rightarrow S_4O_6^{2-} + 2H_2O$$

The rate of reaction was measured by the time taken for a fixed amount of precipitate to form, which was observed as the solution became opaque. The time taken for the precipitate to form was recorded for different temperatures.

The results of the experiment are shown in the following table:

Temperature (°C)	Time taken for precipitate to form (s)
20	120
30	60
40	30
50	15

The results show that the rate of reaction increases as the temperature increases. This is because the molecules have more kinetic energy and are therefore more likely to collide with sufficient energy to overcome the activation energy barrier.

The graph below shows the relationship between the rate of reaction and temperature. The rate of reaction is plotted on the y-axis and temperature on the x-axis. The curve shows that the rate of reaction increases exponentially with temperature.

The graph shows that the rate of reaction increases exponentially with temperature. This is because the molecules have more kinetic energy and are therefore more likely to collide with sufficient energy to overcome the activation energy barrier.
